COMMENT OF THE DAY

The Right Time?

GHANA has become independent. Malaya will shortly follow. Then the West Indies is due to take the plunge into independence soon. Singapore is getting self-government. Cyprus would have it if only the Greek and Turkish Cypriots could agree. Now two parts of Nigeria have set the "Merdeka" process in motion. The question must be asked: In Britain are all these territories really capable of responsible government yet?

Obviously no one answer can be given for all these territories. Some have shown capabilities of sound self-administration but others definitely have not. Malaya is one that has—though there is not unanimous agreement among the population that Britain has done the right thing. In Nigeria there is not unanimous agreement between the three regions that immediate self-government is desirable though all agree that independence by 1959 should be the aim. And in Ghana, a newly independent Commonwealth country, there are already distressing signs that democracy as a concept is not clearly understood by the present Government. Serious charges have been levelled at the Prime Minister, Dr Nkrumah, which go far beyond the allegations of disloyalty to the Queen made last week by Mr Joseph Appiah.

THE idea of substituting the Queen's head for his own on stamps and possibly coins and erecting a statue to himself are not decisions that can be dismissed lightly as childish conceit; they are tantamount to a flagrant usurpation of authority. And apart from Ghana there is the vexed question of Singapore. Many in Hongkong feel it is quite unprepared for self-government and that its only future lies in merging with an independent Malaya. Perhaps wisely, Tengku Abdul Rahman will have nothing to do with his volatile and unpredictable neighbour.

Doubtless the issue in the case of many colonies boils down to this: if self-government is not granted serious and embarrassing unrest may occur. But if Britain is anxious only to appease local sentiment in the hope of preserving friendship it is not discharging its responsibilities as a colonial power which are to prepare the peoples of its many territories for the large task of making their own way in life and to confer upon them ultimately responsible government. This is the principle Britain often professes to follow. But in practice it seems to work out differently.

MORE TELEPHONES FOR COLONY

Big Expansion Plans Announced By Company

PLANS to increase Hongkong's telephone service by 22,000 lines to almost 90,000 in the next few years were outlined this morning by the Managing Director of the Hongkong Telephone Company Ltd, Mr T. S. Pugh.

There will be 12,000 new lines in Hongkong—divided between Central and Western districts—and 10,000 in Kowloon.

The first stage of this expansion will be the opening of half the new $12 million nine-storey West Exchange in Des Voeux Road West at the end of next month.

"This Exchange will be finished and in full operation at the end of the year," Mr Pugh told the China Mail today.

This is how the West Exchange will be brought into operation: By the end of next month, the Telephone Company plans to change 3,000 lines from the Central Exchange in Telephone House to West Exchange. New services will also be connected as fast as possible, Mr Pugh said.

The first stage of this switch has been planned to coincide with the publication of the new telephone book which will contain the new numbers of telephones formerly connected to the Central Exchange but now connected with the Western Exchange.

ANOTHER SWITCH Before the end of the year, the Telephone Company plans to switch another 3,000 lines from Central to West Exchange. When it is fully operating, West Exchange will have about 12,000 lines, 6,000 transferred from Central district, and 6,000 new lines.

"The new Exchange will meet existing demand in the Western district and by virtue of the change-over of 6,000 lines from Central to Western (leaving 6,000 available for re-allocation in Central) we will be able to meet existing demand in the Central district also," Mr Pugh said.

When the new Exchange goes into operation, automation will also go to work. The Telephone Company has installed in its Central Exchange changed number announcement equipment which does the work of 40 telephonists answering people who dial changed numbers.

A tape-recorded voice will say in Cantonese: "This is a recorded message. The number you are dialing has been changed. Please consult your new telephone directory."

PLANNING STAGES The reason for the preamble "This is a recorded message" is to save callers answering the voice back. And it is only in Cantonese because about 90 per cent of the changed numbers...

New West Exchange

NEW LOOK PHONES

These revolutionary New Look telephones are in Hongkong already—but the Telephone Company has imported only a few to see if they are suitable for installation in the Colony.

The telephones consist of just one unit with a dialling mechanism in the base.

The whole instrument is lighter than the handset on telephones in current use. They will be available in a number of colours.

The Hongkong Telephone Company's West Exchange building was completed last month. The installation of equipment—all of which is on the first and second floors—began last August as the building was under construction.

The West Exchange will be equipped with emergency generating equipment which will operate the telephone service in the event of a power failure.

There are two batteries of 1,200 ampere-hours capacity which are capable of running the exchange completely for a period of six to eight hours.

Two motor generators, powered by the Hongkong Electric Company, are charging these batteries continuously. At night the charging is done by a rectifier.

All the equipment is British-made. It is the most modern available to telephone exchanges anywhere in the world. The tone of the dialling and engaged ring is clearer and sharper than on phones connected to existing exchanges.

COMPANY FLATS Above the exchange are 50 flats for Hongkong Telephone Company Chinese employees and a staff canteen and medical clinic. The flats were awarded to men with long service with the company and diligent and conscientious records.

These flats are situated in the upper six storeys. Some have harbour views. Others face West, Central and The Peak. Employees drew lots for the flats. There are common laundries and bathrooms equipped with lavatories, wash basins and showers on each floor. On the ground floor of the new building is a telephone accounts office, a Cable & Wireless office and a large Post Office.

NEW YORK HEAT WAVE

New York, June 16. The temperature rose to 92.6 degrees (Fahrenheit) at noon today, the highest reading in New York City thus far in 1957. The Weather Bureau said the hot, humid weather would continue until Wednesday at least.—Reuter.

'MAO COULD BECOME ANOTHER TITO'

Washington, June 16. United States Democratic Senator William Fulbright said today it was "quite possible that China's Mao Tse-tung would become another Tito."

Senator Fulbright, a member of the US Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in a television interview called for negotiations on the US recognition of the Peking Government, saying it was inevitable and "the only question is when and how you do it."

Senator Fulbright said he would begin negotiations aimed at granting recognition in exchange for concessions, one of which would be a Communist guarantee of the independence of Formosa.—Reuter.

FAMILY FEUD

Beirut, June 16. The State Minister, Yusuf Hitti, announced that 18 people were killed and 25 injured today in a family feud sharpened by the fact that the rival families each have a candidate in the North Lebanon elections on June 30.

The clash occurred at the North Lebanese mountain village of Mizlana near Tripoli, far from the scene of today's elections, which were calm except for three slightly injured in a brawl in Bourj el-Brajel village.—Reuter.

Landing On 3 Engines

London, June 16. An emergency stand-by was called at London Airport tonight after a British Overseas Corporation Constellation airliner from Tokyo had radioed that it was landing on three engines. The Constellation, with 31 passengers on board, landed safely.—Reuter.

IT'S JUST THE MONSOON

Observatory Does Not Expect New Deluge

THE heavy rain that started to fall this morning and continued for several hours is not an indication that Hongkong is in for another abnormal rain period or deluge like the one at the end of last month.

A forecaster of the Royal Observatory said this morning that the Colony was now experiencing the southwest monsoons which had just set in, with the accompanying wet weather.

Though the skies were darkened with rainclouds and the rain was coming down continuously, the forecaster thought that the weather would clear somewhat in the afternoon. "We get these thunderous storms quite frequently in the monsoon period, especially in the morning," the forecaster said.

Two people received minor injuries and had to be treated at Kowloon Hospital during the height of this morning's storm.

The Police report that a wall collapsed in Boundary Street near the Shamshuipo School. The rubble fell on some huts below resulting in injuries to two people. Reports of huts collapsing were also received from Li Cheng Uk Village, Shek Kip Mei Village, and Wu Chai Upper Village, Kowloon. Fortunately no one was injured in this case.

MAY SEE THE SUN The weatherman said that though it was pouring in the morning, there was "no reason for it to continue." With a bit of luck, we may yet see the sun for a short while, he forecast.

However, nearly five inches of rain fell in two hours between 8 and 11 o'clock this morning and the downpour which seemed never ending caused floods in Hongkong and Kowloon roads and caused minor landslides and more damage to New Territories highways.

Our reporter motoring from Sha Tin to town this morning reported that a section of Tai Po Road was washed away by the on-rush of water coming down from the hills. The damage occurred at a spot some 200 yards north of the former damaged site where a Bailey bridge had been built by the Royal Engineers last month. The water had washed a gap 15 feet wide and eight feet deep on the seaward side of the road.

New Blood Bath In Haiti

Port-au-Prince, June 16. The Army and supporters of ousted provisional President Daniel Fignole clashed in a 12-hour blood bath in the slums of Port-au-Prince today that left at least 50 persons dead and hundreds wounded.

The death toll was expected to run much higher. Hospitals and the Port-au-Prince morgue were filled with bodies.

The Army turned three slums areas of the capital into a shooting gallery, firing machineguns and rifles into rioting crowds in the streets and dropping civilians by the score.

Machinegunners stitched bullets through the sides of flimsy shacks crammed with people. An estimated 1,000 persons were herded into trucks at bayonet point and carted off to jail.

RETALIATION The Fignolists retaliated with fire that bathed the slums in electric light in the pre-dawn darkness.

The Fignolists poured into the streets at midnight to denounce the three-man military junta which ousted Fignole in a bloodless coup on Friday and forced him to exile in the United States.

Ambulances carried off the dead and wounded. One ambulance attendant said he counted 48 bodies, not including those buried on the scene by soldiers.—United Press.

Jordan Closes Embassy In Cairo

Amman, June 16. The Jordan Government has decided to close its Cairo Embassy and withdraw the staff as a counter-measure to Egypt's action in "expelling the Jordanian Ambassador," the Jordanian Foreign Minister, Samir Rifal, announced tonight.

Mr Rifal, speaking after a four-hour session of the Council of Ministers, added: "This does not mean breaking diplomatic relations between the two countries."

King Hussein attended the Cabinet meeting for 90 minutes but left before it finished.

On June 10 the Jordan Government declared the Egyptian Military Attaché at Amman, Major Faud Hilla, and the Egyptian Consul in Jerusalem, Mohamed Abdul Aziz, persona non grata.

It asked the Egyptian Government to withdraw Major Hilla immediately.—Reuter.

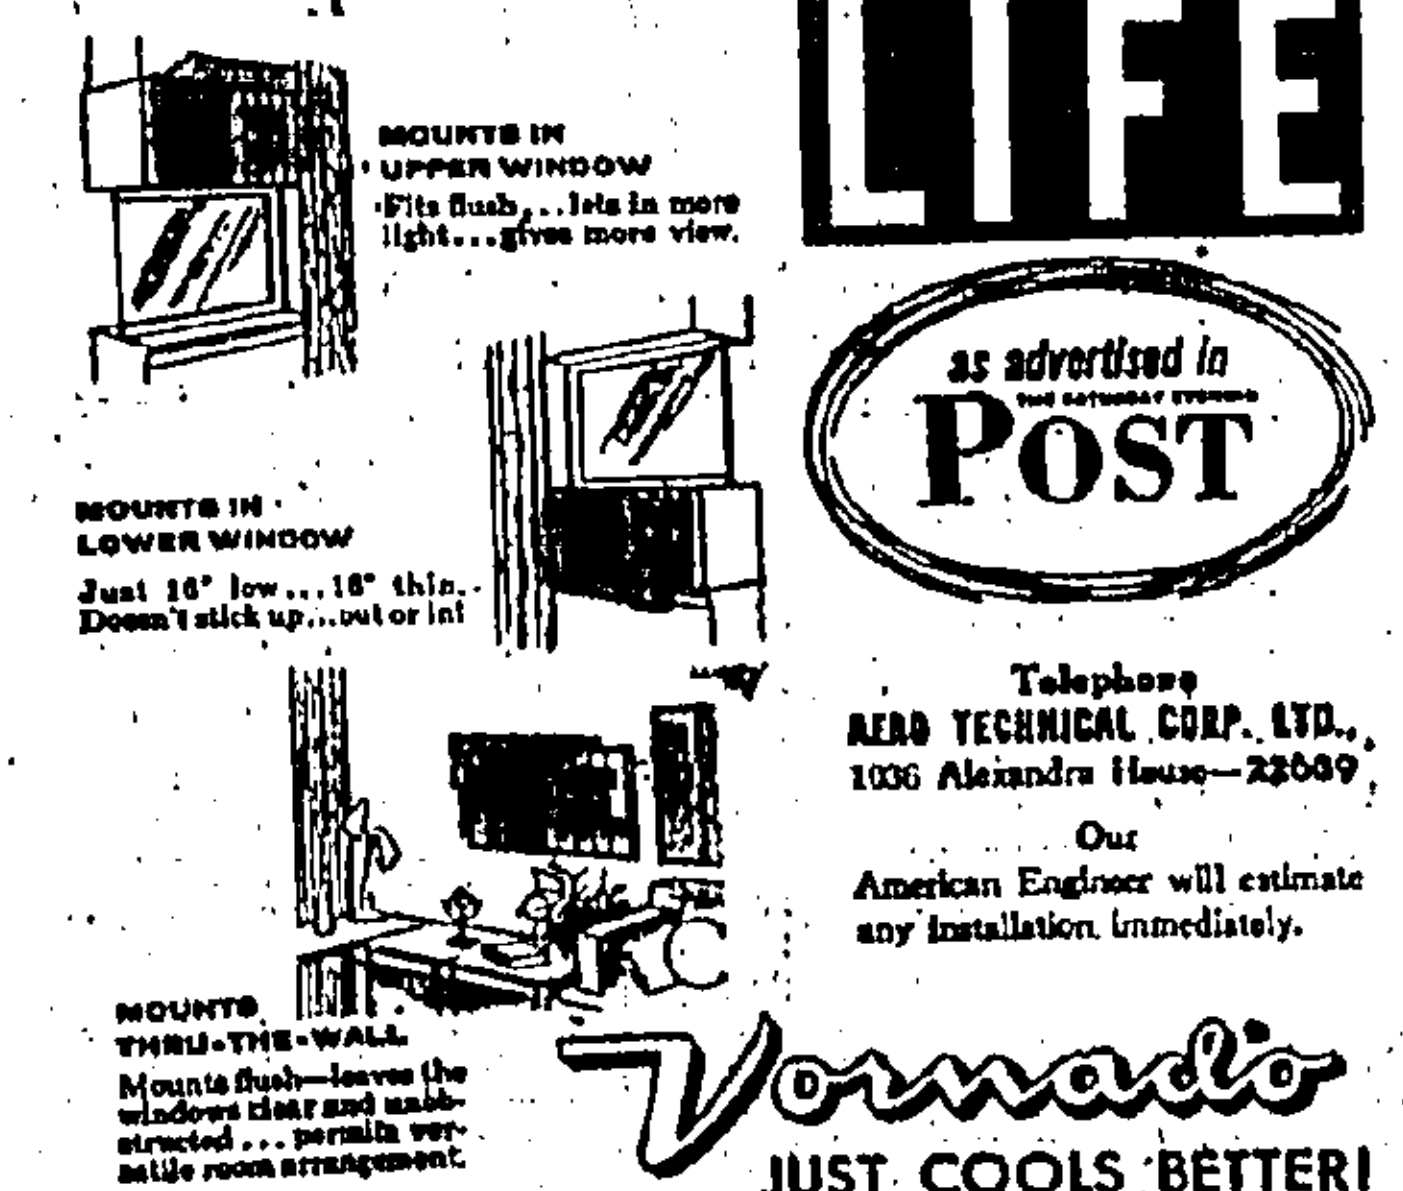

Thefts From Cars

Two umbrellas and two pairs of trousers were reported stolen from three private cars parked in Hongkong. The thefts were committed in Wanchai, Causeway Bay and Central districts. The Police are detaining two suspects in these cases.

St Laurent Handing Over

Ottawa, June 16. Prime Minister Louis St Laurent, 75, will resign tomorrow and turn over the reins of government to Conservative leader John Diefenbaker, it was learned tonight.

Diefenbaker will accept the task of forming a Cabinet and concentrate first on mending arid relations to represent Canada at next week's Commonwealth Prime Minister conference in London.

The only delay in St Laurent's quitting office seen by well-informed sources is the need to get final approval on a Treasury Board Report. Treasury Board plans to meet on Monday morning.

The Treasury Board is a committee of the Cabinet and senior executive officers of the government, which must pass on all expenditures. It was understood that it had to scrutinize in detail the pay raises announced last week for the civil service.

Diefenbaker earlier agreed that the pay raises should not be held up by the current government crisis.—United Press.

'FOXY' FOWLER CAUGHT AFTER 33 DAYS' FREEDOM

Maryport, June 16. Bill "Foxy" Fowler, escaped convict sought by police throughout Britain and Western Europe, was recaptured near here early today 33 days after breaking out of Dartmoor Prison.

Fowler, also known as "The artful dodger" because of his skill in avoiding recapture, was trapped by villagers in a combined shop and filling station at Filmbay, Cumberland, on the north-western coast, and later handed over to the police.

Filmbay is 300 miles from Dartmoor, in the south-west, Britain's toughest prison, which claims to be escape-proof.

The search began when Foxy slipped away in thick fog from a party of Dartmoor convicts working outside the walls, had spread through the whole country. Last week it switched to Continental Europe and his description was circulated through Interpol, the international police organisation.

RECORD

No prisoner has escaped completely from Dartmoor for over 100 years. Most fail to get away from the bleak open moors surrounding the prison and are recaptured within a day or two and Fowler's 33 days of liberty are a post-war record.

Fowler, aged 34, small and tough with a scarred face and tattooed arms, had served just about half of a five-year sentence for robbery and carrying a revolver when he escaped. He had escaped from other prisons twice before.

The day following his disappearance he was spotted inside a five-mile cordon which police and wardens threw round the Dartmoor area but despite tracker dogs and a full pack of footsore the wild Westmen slipped through. He was reported in various parts of the country since.

Although often sighted and once actually questioned by a policeman he managed to keep one move ahead of the baffled police.—China Mail Special.

Negro Hugs Girl

Jacksonville, June 16. A negro man hugged and "held onto" a 15-year-old white girl in a bus ticket line here today, then was thrown to the floor and "kicked" by the girl's father and several bystanders. Police said the negro, Joe Land Bennett, 25, was booked for disorderly conduct and assaulting a girl, who screamed for help when she was seized. He told police "something just came over me."—United Press.

ANNIVERSARY OF LIDICE HORROR COMMEMORATED

By MICHAEL WEIGALL

Lidice, June 16. Guests from 16 nations, including Japan, meeting near a mass grave, heard speeches against West German rearmament today at a ceremony marking the 15th anniversary of the German razing of this Czech mining village.

There were three Japanese guests, including Mr Kan Mazima, Secretary of the Japanese Society for the Normalisation of Relations between China, Japan and the Soviet Union, and a leading member of Japan's National Relief Association.

VERY CALM

Mr Mazima said the ceremony was "very calm compared to those in Japan."

Wreaths were piled high over the mass grave of 100 men of Lidice shot in June 1942, as infantrymen with mixed bayonets presented arms around a crude wooden cross with a crown of thorns made of barbed wire, which Soviet troops set up at the liberation when the graves were discovered.

The foreign guests, with "Lidice" badges in their lapels, mingled with a crowd of 5,000 Sunday trippers and survivors of the tragedy.

Britain's was the largest delegation, with 58 members including Lord Stanagate, Chairman of the Inter-parliamentary Union.

Lidice was ordered to be "removed from the map" in 1942 as a reprisal for the murder of Reinhard Heydrich, Nazi Protector of Bohemia and Moravia, by agents parachuted from Britain.

The male population over 16 was executed and 185 women sent to Ravensbrueck Concentration Camp. Of 92 children taken from their mothers only 16 were alive at the end of the war, including nine who were handed to German foster parents because they had fair hair, blue eyes and other "Aryan traits".

REMARIED

Many of the survivors have remarried and are now living, and with their husbands and new children in the 160 houses of the New Lidice, an ultra-modern settlement built on a slope overlooking the razed foundations of the old village.

The villagers have to pay only for fuel and utilities. The houses are each set in a small garden and have been equipped free of charge with the latest domestic appliances and with a nurse.—Reuter.

Gaitskell Asks What's Holding Up Agreement

Newcastle-On-Tyne, June 16. Mr Hugh Gaitskell, leader of the British Labour Party, said here tonight that Britain should test Russian proposals for suspending H-bomb experiments—not the bombs themselves. He also complained that the present disarmament talks in London were "dragging along painfully slowly in a half-secret atmosphere of rumour and leakage" and asked why could not the world get all-round disarmament with proper controls.

"Why can't we get it? Who is obstructing it?" he asked at a political meeting. "Is it the Russians or the Americans or the French or the British government? Why can't we be told?"

The Parliamentary Opposition leader said that two rumours were "particularly disturbing."

Reunification

"It is said that some governments are against making a disarmament agreement until we get a political settlement," he added. "By political settlement is apparently meant German reunification."

"I am in favour of German reunification with genuine free elections but I think it is quite wrong to hold up all-round disarmament agreement until we get a political settlement of this kind." Mr Gaitskell said that those who talked like this were really "hinting that we might still go to war to bring about frontier changes, that disarmament would prevent us from going to war and that therefore we should reject a disarmament agreement until we have forced the Russians to agree to the changes we want."

"This is a stupid, dangerous and absurd attitude," he declared. "We, the British, should make our position clear that we will accept full controls on the air and ground if others do the same."

HUGH GAITSKELL

Dragging Along Painfully

same. Those governments who are reluctant to agree must be brought out into the open and made to answer to world opinion."

H-Bomb Tests

On the H-bomb tests Mr Gaitskell said that the Russians had just proposed that they should be suspended for two or three years and that this suspension should be enforced by effective controls. "Why should we not accept these proposals?" he asked. "Some say that the Russians are not to be trusted and do not really mean it but surely the right course then is to test the Russians on the bombs." About the disarmament talks Mr Gaitskell also said: "It is about time the rest of the world were told what is happening and what is holding up the conclusion of an agreement."

INFLUENZA & H-BOMBS

London, June 16. An Australian health expert said here tonight that he thought it "extremely improbable" that hydrogen and atomic explosions were the cause of the influenza epidemic sweeping Asia — "but, of course, I cannot rule this out."

He is Sir MacFarlane Burnet, and he told reporters at London Airport that he did not think it possible Britain would escape the epidemic.

"I think it will cover the whole world and on past experience I would say that it will arrive in Britain with the cold weather next winter," he said. Sir MacFarlane, Director of the Walter and Eliza Hall Research Institute of Melbourne, is on his way to Geneva for the International Poliomyelitis Congress.—Reuter.

A UK OR US REACTOR?

Fight Between Authorities & Industrialists

By YUKO NAKAMIKADO

Tokyo, June 16.

Acute behind-the-scenes competition has developed here between Japanese authorities and industrialists who are advocating that Japan's first commercial atomic energy power plant should come from Britain rather than from the United States.

A travelling commission, which should have been making the final decision early this year, has been delayed month-by-month as the debate continues.

Purchase of a British reactor of the same type as that working at Calder Hall, has been officially recommended. But powerful Japanese business interests are allied with United States companies which offer industrial agreements.

They have blocked or delayed the decision to "Buy-British" but are in turn embarrassed by Japanese criticism of the United States Government's conditions concerning the use of reactors.

AIRLINE TICKET FOR GIRARD

Tokyo, June 17.

The Pan American Airways office in Tokyo has an airline ticket to Honolulu waiting for Specialist 3rd Class William Girard any time he goes in to pick it up.

The airline said the Committee for the Protection of Constitutional Rights for the State of California paid US$500 to the Los Angeles representatives of Pan American on Friday for one tourist passage from Tokyo to Hawaii.

The airline telephoned Girard at Camp Whittington, where he is being confined pending the outcome of manslaughter charges against him.

"I don't have anything to say," was Girard's comment after he had time to digest the news. "I am not going anywhere."

A spokesman for the airline said, "If Specialist Girard can make the arrangements he can pick up the ticket any time he comes in to get it."—United Press.

MAYFLOWER NOT SUCH A SPECTACULAR SUCCESS

Plymouth, Mass., June 16.

Officials here conceded today that Mayflower II was proving less than the spectacular success they had hoped it would be as a tourist attraction.

"They come, they look at the boat and they get in their cars and drive away," said Mr. Jack Barry, Executive Director of Plymouth's Mayflower Reception Committee. Mayflower, arriving here last week after a 54-day crossing of the Atlantic, has been seen by an estimated 70,000—less than half the number originally expected.

A Flop?

Mr. Barry, asked if he thought it had been a "commercial flop," said: "No, I do not. I would say that we have not been deluged with the tourists we thought we might. I think what has happened is that the regular operators (restaurants and hotels) are doing considerably more business than usual."

"But the concessionaires are not doing as well as expected," Mr. Barry emphasized. That Plymouth's Mayflower Reception Committee—a co-ordinating group for local organizations—had nothing to gain from the ship itself.

"We have refused all sorts of commercial tie-ups," he declared.

Prices

"As Mayflower moved up the American coast last week, journalists and the vanguard of tourists coming to Plymouth found that prices were higher than usual."

One dispatch in a New York newspaper reported that the price of a lobster dinner was $7 and the price of a one-course drink of whiskey was $1.50—about double the usual price. On arrival, car parks near the waterfront were charging $2.50. Concessions sprung up selling everything from replicas of pilgrim's costumes to one-acre tracts of land overlooking Plymouth Rock for one dollar.—China Mail Special.

WOMAN TRIES TO CAPTURE POLICE STATION

Newton, N.J., June 16. A woman milk rancher brandishing a 12-gauge shotgun containing three shells tried to capture a police station early today to get even for being fined for driving through a stop sign.

She came off second best in her encounter, but not until she had two policemen with their backs to her wall. The story, as told by police, goes like this: Vivian Masters, 20, who works in a milk ranch here, marched into police headquarters at 1:30 a.m. and threatened to kill patrolman William L. Knoll, who was alone at the station desk. She pointed her gun at Knoll's head for about 10 minutes. Then a radio call came in from a patrol car. Miss Masters told Knoll not to answer, but he said it was imperative she call the officer in the case would be made. Knoll called and Knoll's answer. He gave the patrol car a special code signal calling them to headquarters. Patrolmen Anthony Dyda and Clarence Fiedland rushed to the station. Dyda went in leaving his partner outside. The moment he stepped through the door, Miss Masters slammed him and put his gun on the desk. The girl ordered Dyda to bring in patrolman Charles Young. The policeman who arrested her a month ago for driving through a stop sign. By that time, Fiedland walked into the station and discovered that Miss Masters had shot her gun from her hands. After her earlier arrest, she had been in the station house with her fire and accidentally put her hand through a glass door. Today, police took no chances. They put her in handcuffs immediately.—United Press.

Elections

LEBANESE TAKE TO THE HILLS

By JOE MORRIS

Beirut, June 16.

Thousands of Lebanese voters took to the hills today for the second round of this country's four-stage national elections which saw neutralist and left wing opposition candidates suffer a decisive defeat last Sunday.

Today's round of voting was in the Mount Lebanon district. And the hardest thing to find in Beirut was a taxi.

Most of the capital's cabs had been hired by election candidates and plastered bumper with pictures and slogans.

They were being used to provide free transport for voters from Beirut and other centres up the towering terraced mountain to home villages where Lebanese maintain registration in order to help the political position of their families.

AT STAKE

Today's voting was not greatly significant. Twenty seats were at stake in an area largely inhabited by Maronite and Greek Orthodox Christians and Druzes. Two of those seats were uncontested.

Of the 40 candidates today, only three were from the opposition National Front which received a heavy blow at the polls last week with the defeat of its two leading lights, former premiers Abdullah Yafi and Saeb Salam.

Voting took place with no incidents reported by the time the polls closed at 1700 local time.

The total electorate of Mount Lebanon is 235,000, and their 20 deputies make up close to one third of the country's 66-seat Parliament.—United Press.

RED CROSS WORKERS MOVE IN St. Louis, June 16.

Red Cross workers and special crews took over the St. Louis disaster area today to clean up the tragic residue of flash floods that claimed at least 18 lives and routed 6,000 persons from their homes.

Swollen streams in the area began receding to normal levels after a two-day downpour of rain and persons evicted by the raging waters began returning to their homes.

Sunshine and warm temperatures returned to the area and weather men said they would stay for at least the next two days.

TORNADO

Meanwhile, a tornado struck a farm near Sherburn, Minnesota, and demolished a barn, but no injuries were reported. A funnel appeared near Clayton, Minnesota, about the same time it touched the ground briefly, rose into the sky and disappeared without leaving any damage behind it.

The hottest weather of the spring was predicted for the Middle West and East during the next 48 hours. Temperatures already had risen to the 80s and 90s over much of the country east of the Mississippi River.—United Press.

FIVE DIE AS TORNADO HIT VILLAGES

By ALDO TRIPPINI

Milan, June 16.

A mushroom-shaped tornado swept through the Ligurian Alps in the wake of a deluge of two-pound hailstones today wrecking three villages and leaving a trail of dead and injured.

First reports from the scene of terror 30 miles south of Milan said at least five villagers were killed and more than 80 injured.

Hours after the Sunday whirlwind struck at 12:30 (1130 GMT) the village of Cignola, Robecco and Bressana in the Passo Scuro (Sombric Mountain Pass) region presented a scene of chaos.

SCRAMBLED

Fire brigades from Milan and federal police squads from all over the Pavese province scrambled in the wreckage of peasant homes for fresh victims.

The toll of the tornado, added to two others swept away by raging torrents in adjoining Alpine regions during the day, brought the total killed in four days of violent storm to at least 10. Three were killed in the past three days of raging flood.

Those found dead in the wreckage of Cignola, where the epicentre hit, included two women, a man, a boy and a two-year-old baby.

It could have been worse at Robecco where 10 were injured, one seriously. Half an hour before the tornado struck, 200 villagers were jammed into the village church attending midday Mass. The wind wrecked the church, the bell tower was split in two and the bells cast 400 yards across the fields.

SCATTERED

Canavalls in Robecco and Bressana were less severe than in Cignola, because the villagers saw the storm coming and scattered into the fields. It was at Cignola where the five were killed. Of 34 persons injured badly enough to need hospital attention, police said 21 were in serious condition.

Eye-witnesses said the disaster started with a deluge of rain from blacken skies. Then came a battering of hail. Some of the hailstones weighed half a pound, police said.

Out of the darkness a white, mushroom-shaped funnel of wind swept down on the little villages at the speed of an express train.—United Press.

Invitation Rejected By League

Cairo, June 16.

The Arab League will not send representatives to the Moscow Youth Festival to be held between July 25 and August 11.

The Secretariat of the League, which had been asked by the organising committee of the Festival to send observers in view of the League's interest in sports and their promotion, has apologised for being unable to accept the invitation.

The Secretariat said that the invitation had been received after the termination of the Council session and therefore no decision to accept it was possible.—Reuter.

French Tourists In Peking

Paris, June 16.

Radio Peking reported that the first French tourists by arrangement between French and Chinese travelling services had arrived in Peking after visiting Canton, Shanghai, Hangchow and Nanking.

They came to China through the French Mont Tourist Service. Some dozens of private foreign tourists from India, and Japan, Australia and Denmark are now touring China, the China International Tourist Service said.—France-Press.

The day they made me

THERE is no sound in the world quite like the din of a police car going. Especially when it is just behind you.

And the calm that follows stretches from days to weeks. Then the postman calls and there on the breakfast table beside your two-minute eggs is a most pressing invitation.

The local magistrates desire to discuss with you the matter of your speed in a restricted area.

It is at moments like that that the average man loses his head completely. After explaining to everyone in earshot how he is the victim of the grossest miscarriage of justice since Joan of Arc, he goes to his office and dictates a letter to the court which explains that he didn't do it, he wasn't there.

Too cool

And if he was and he did, then he was in a hurry to get to a business appointment. He encloses a blank cheque and his driving licence.

I did no such thing. Mind you, I did point out to my nearest and dearest that mine really was a miscarriage of justice. Then I went to my lawyer.

He is a good fellow. For drawing up wills, coping with rent acts and such like he is admirable. But I didn't like his attitude towards my cause, which in the least, I was too cool, too tranquil, a little too inclined to see both sides of the question. A man like that has not got the fire and the burning zeal to readjust the slipping blindfold of justice.

I demanded counsel. From the moment you have counsel you undergo a sea-change.

Impressive

One is inclined to turn club conversations round to torts and writs just for the chance to bring in "My counsel says" or "My counsel advises..."

This is most impressive and if your barrister gets stuck with some very odd opinions, then think what the man is costing. Comes the day when the magistrates expect to meet you at 10 o'clock in the morning.

One is there in ample time for a first glimpse of this advocate who is going to set the law.

a criminal

And so I joined the felons.

ROBIN NICHOLAS was gonged and fined... It's the thing that might happen to any motorist reports ringing. And one is promptly downcast.

Counsel stands there in black jacket and pinstriped trousers. He looks like a shop walker. Where is the gown to hitch up as he makes a telling point? Where is the wig—yellowed with the years of famous court cases? The explanation that gowns are not worn because the Bench has none is no consolation.

But there are compensations. While all my fellow travellers in trouble had to hang about a foyer, varnished in tinsel, I went to a little secret room where the final polish is put on the defence.

On the way I passed a gaggle of policemen having a shifty cigarette. Was it my imagination or was there a touch of panic in their stances? Were they saying to themselves something about a Daniel come to judgment?

Nanchalance

"No smoking" said the notice in the room. My counsel lit a cigarette with nanchalance. Whose spirits could help rising in the company of a man with such fine disregard for officialdom?

Into the court I went. In front just below the Bench sat my counsel with bright-backed legal books in front of him...

I sat at the back sneering at the police patrolmen witnesses standing around.

What a lot they looked without their caps on. Receding hair, and rounded shoulders, without their caps and their intimidating gongs, they look like jockeys without horses. They even wear red and green pullovers under their uniforms.

and odd coloured socks. Just imagine what the defence is going to do to them.

The excuses they gave when they were stopped. "What? Me?" "I wasn't looking." "Can't you let me off?"

Pathetic

And their pathetic letters. No wonder the Bench shrugged and ploughed through them at the rate of about one every five minutes.

And as these weaklings paid their fines and tipped out of court I had a burning desire to catch them by the arm, persuade them to stay to listen to a really great defence. To see what could be done.

It was time for me to be put in front of the dock. I resented this. Why wasn't I allowed to stand in that little wooden pen, writing careful notes with a gold pencil, immaculate, cool, and radiating confidence?

Magistrates take a very cruel advantage with this headmaster-cringing schoolboy approach and I am writing to the A.A. about it.

It was the first police witness who quoted me as saying when I was stopped. "What? Me? I wasn't looking."

It was the second who looked at his book and recalled I had also said "Can't you let me off this time?"

"I long for fresh experiences," she told me. "I want to go to China and do a head of Chou En-lai. I consider him a very great leader. Perhaps one day the Chinese will rule the world."

He cared

I asked her who were the most exciting people she has met, for Mrs Sheridan has known half the great figures of this century.

"First, I would say Axel Munthe, I stayed with him in Capri when I was young, and Request

All I got was a pained frown and a polite request to answer "Just yes or no."

I gave up. There was only the impassioned defence plea to come and I didn't give much for its chances.

But it sounded better than I expected. It certainly convinced me and, as my counsel told the Bench, the case was in great dispute.

And sure enough the Bench huddled together and disputed like mad.

Two minutes later I discovered that the only argument they were having was about the size of the fine.

Though I did get a little homily from the chairman... As far as I can remember he said I looked exactly the kind of character who would try to take away the good name of a hard working policeman. He said the impression had struck him forcibly as soon as he entered the court. "Pay £2, please."

It was four minutes past noon when I joined the criminal classes.

Outside the court my counsel and I met.

"It WAS a pretty hopeless case," he said. My indignation seethed and bubbled but all I could say was "You did remarkably well."

And then the confounded fellow asked for a lift and all the time talked about cases he had saved from disaster.

Not quite all the time. Once he paused to say "Look out there's a police car over there."

COMRADES OUT OF AFRICA

By GEORGE HOGAN

In the vast Exhibition Building at Earl's Court, London while preparations were in progress for the opening of this year's Royal Tournament, that grand spectacle of the Fighting Services, a young British officer met again the African orderly who saved his life in Kenya three years ago.

They met, but Second Lieutenant Michael Tetley could not recognise Corporal Reguton of the 23rd Battalion King's African Rifles who had stood over his wounded body and fought off the attacking Mau Mau terrorists on that day they both well remember—February 6, 1954. For Michael Tetley is blind. A bullet entered his left eye on that fateful day and came out below his right ear.

Before that happened he had shown courage and initiative when leading his platoon in a fight with a well armed company of the Hika Hika gang of Mau Mau commanded by "Brigadier Batu Batu." During an advance in thick country some terrorists were seen to be hiding in long grass by a group of huts. The young subaltern immediately rushed forward alone into their midst and sprayed them with bullets, killing two and wounding several others.

As the remainder of the gang scattered he reformed his platoon, straightening out the line with the rest of the company and then led his Askaris forward to attack the terrorists who were now firing from cover. More Mau Mau were killed but the advance was held up by accurate fire.

In search of more 50 rifles and hand-made grenades Lieutenant Tetley moved among his men completely ignoring his personal safety. It was then that he was seriously wounded and Corporal Reguton, his personal orderly, came to his aid, standing over his body and fighting off the attackers until they dispersed. Reguton was mentioned in dispatches for his bravery and devotion to duty.

MBE

Michael Tetley, for his part in this action and for courage, leadership and initiative displayed on other occasions, was awarded the M.B.E. He was responsible for the killing and capture of over 60 terrorists during three months' operations and for the capture of about

Now he is a patient at St Dunstan's and is studying physiotherapy. When he met his Askari orderly again at Earl's Court the sounds of military preparations were going on around them. The Services atmosphere was one they both understood, but their minds went back to a different aspect of soldiering under a hot sky and in the silence of the open country where every bush held danger.

Perhaps Michael Tetley was best able to recapture the old scene. Certainly he was not distracted by the faces around him. He could not see them...

The rebel who made Sir Winston see red

Anne Scott-James

EVERY so often, the stiff, dull ranks of High Society throw up a rebel.

I have been talking to Clare Sheridan, sculptress, adventurer, and mystic, who has just published the story of her stormy life.

A daughter of one of "the three" lovely Jeromes, Clare Sheridan makes her cousin, Winston Churchill, seem a very conventional bird. Indeed, he has spent a lot of time in the last 50 years ticking her off for her wild behaviour.

For in that time she has been Bolshevik and Roman Catholic, has known palaces and poverty, travelled from the Sahara to the Rockies, been awayed by Munthe, Trotsky, Gandhi, the Pope, and had a flaming row with Mussolini!

Now 72, still warm-hearted and vital, still beautiful with blue eyes and a shock of curly white hair, she lives in an Italianate house in Hastings.

We sat and talked in a studio full of busts—Trotzky, Lenin, Gandhi Churchill—and of blocks of wood waiting to be carved. For her adventures are by no means done.

"I long for fresh experiences," she told me. "I want to go to China and do a head of Chou En-lai. I consider him a very great leader. Perhaps one day the Chinese will rule the world."

CLARE SHERIDAN

he first gave me the idea of Socialism.

"Then, Trotsky, who alone of the early Communist leaders cared for art, and helped me when I sculpted him. The rest were absorbed by the revolution, but he was a Jew and could not shut his eyes to art. They were obsessed, but he could be witty and gay."

Mrs Sheridan was smuggled, via Moscow, in the first terrifying phase of Bolshevism, and spent some gloomy days alone, first with Lenin, then with Trotsky, whose bust she carved with her hand as she talked.

"Then, Gandhi; he was truly a saint. I was always sorry that Winston refused to meet him."

Great friends

I asked if Sir Winston had forgiven her for going to Russia in the twenties, for he was furious at the time, while her father was so ashamed that he dared not set foot in White's.

"Yes, Winston is an old man now and his memory is not very good, so we are the greatest of friends. I am most anxious to find out how he will react to my painting—since Christmas I have started painting in oils."

"We never discuss politics, we clash so violently."

"But we have much in common; for one thing, the Jerome gift of long life. He has outlived all his political generalities, and I still have my strong right arm for modelling in wood or stone. I can't believe I may have only 10 more years to live. People say I have had a tempestuous life, but I wouldn't change it."

"The I see so virtue in security."

PERFECT WAY TO GET A HEADACHE

YOU know the sort of person who is precisely punctual, who is over concerned with trivial detail, who hates to depart from strict routine—well, Mrs Wallace was like that. She was so fussy that it wouldn't have surprised me if she washed her hands after having a bath.

Often these people are earnest and intelligent, yet they spend a twopenny halfpenny stamp to send someone a bill for twopenny.

They may give other people occasional headaches, but they tend to suffer regular headaches themselves.

"I don't think I'm that meticulous," Mrs Wallace protested. "In any case, doctor, what's all this got to do with my migraine?"

She didn't know that there was such a thing as migrainous personality. Like Mrs Wallace, these headachy people feel their responsibilities keenly. They are perfectionists who want things to be just so. Socially they are as proper as a duchess on duty and correct as two and two making four.

"Yes," she said, "but that's why I've come to see you. These headaches interfere with my social life."

It is strange how migrainous headaches often occur at week-ends and holidays. When others are rowing down the river on a sunny morning, migrainous people are lying on their beds with the curtains drawn. It is as if all their worry about detail during the working week has caught up with them just when it is time to relax.

"I suppose mental overwork can make the brain ache," Mrs Wallace said.

But headaches are not caused by the brain aching. The pain is simply due to blood vessels widening and stretching.

"Enormous blood vessels round the brain open wider," I explained. "The same vessels in the skin do agree she was like that."

Indeed, headache is often nothing more than a red signal that we have reached a state of emotional tension. "Stop, stop," the signal inter. "Take it easy." Some doctors claim that eight out of ten people who have migrainous headaches can be cured if they are helped with their emotional problems.

"I don't think I have any problems," Mrs Wallace declared, "except my young daughter." I'm worried about her bilious bouts! Very often the offspring of migrainous parents suffer from periodic bilious attacks. Doctors recently have called these attacks "abdominal migraine." It has long been known that migraine runs in families. But now it is established that children can suffer "headaches" in their stomachs.

ASSOCIATED

I explained how the younger child the more frequently was migrainous manifested in abdominal symptoms. As children grow older the abdominal symptoms become less marked and the headaches more prominent.

"When I was a kid," Mrs Wallace admitted, "I myself used to get those bouts of bilious feelings. They said it was due to my appendix, and in fact they removed it."

Some fashionable surgeons say that they can tell how financially well off a lady is by the number of scars on her abdomen. This may be far fetched but undoubtedly a number of young people are still having normal appendices removed when all they have is "abdominal migraine."

"So stop worrying about your young daughter," I said, "there is nothing wrong organically with migrainous sufferers whether the migraine be centred in the head or in the abdomen."

More to the point as I had feared but undoubtedly a number of young people are still having normal appendices removed when all they have is "abdominal migraine."

"Anyway I must go, doctor," she said, glancing at the clock. "I've already taken 30 minutes of your time."

SCIENCE & ENGINEERING

TRENDS IN SWITCHGEAR DESIGN

Little Resemblance Between Old Marble Switchboard And New Cubicle Type

After the annual general meeting of the Institution of Electrical Engineers in May last, Sir Gordon Russell, CBE, MC, Director of the Council of Industrial Design, gave a lecture on "Appearance Design" in which he expressed the view that the best designs came from engineers who had had some aesthetic training leading to an appreciation of colours, pattern, shape, quality of lettering and general appearance.

He suggested that it might often be wise if an industrial designer worked with the engineer in the very early stages. In his view, there were many cases in heavy industry where large groups of machines could be improved by some co-ordinated thinking in regard to the components which were used with them.

There is, for instance, little resemblance between the appearance of the old marble switchboard of the old power stations and the cubicle type switchgear of the present time, while the modern control room can be said to be an example of good aesthetic appearance coupled with fitness for purpose, which is of course a material factor in good engineering design.

Switchgear, however, today is to be found in the industrial, commercial, and marine fields, as well as in power stations, and perhaps the greatest advance in improved appearance, and in the application of standard units to form a composite whole, is to be found in modern installations of switchgear in industrial works and large office or commercial establishments.

One example of this trend is the unit system developed by the General Electric Co. Ltd. some five years ago, when the provision of additional plant in the switchgear works at Winton enabled a complete range of standard cubicles of a new type to be introduced. These cubicles can be used for many kinds of control boards, high voltage and low voltage switchboards, contactor panels etc. The actual units consist of flat panels made by bending into 'U' section the edges of previously-punched steel plates.

This provides a construction of very neat appearance, and no framework is needed. The panels are fastened together by means of concealed bolts passing through holes punched in the internal flanges. Each unit panel has a large number of holes in standard positions which can be used not only for fixing the units together to form cubicles, but also for the attachment of the internal parts.

In the case of contactor cubicles it is possible to mount the contactor and other apparatus on their slabs and then erect the cubicles round the slabs. If necessary front and rear doors can be supplied, and the cubicles can be made dustproof.

Modern trends in equipment of large stores and retail establishments have been toward a greater use of electricity for many purposes, calling for switchgear of considerably greater capacity than was required some twenty years ago. This brought with it a growing trend towards the adoption of cubicle type switchgear not only for the main board, but also for the switch fuses controlling the feeder circuits. Two essentials occur in this case, first flexibility and secondly good appearance, and both can be met by means of this unit system, while flexibility also exists in connection with the provision of extensions.

An example is the installation of cubicle gear at the premises of Spooners Ltd in Plymouth, where two supplies from different sources are taken to a main board. The main supply is controlled by a 1000A oil circuit breaker and a second circuit breaker of 400A controls the supplementary supply. The two top rows of cubicles accommodate 22 fused switches, and below them is a row of change-over switches which, in the event of the main supply failing, enable the supplementary supply to be connected through separate switches in the bottom row of cubicles to a number of circuits for the purpose of maintaining emergency services.

Alternating current drives for engine room auxiliaries and other plant on board ship are becoming increasingly popular, and here again the use of cubicles of pressed steel construction without supporting timeworks is the method adopted. The height and depth of the cubicles have been standardised so that a number of units, and their associated switchgear required on the main board, but also simplifies the location and isolation of faulty apparatus.

A similar principle is applied to GEC medium voltage air-break switchgear suitable for voltages up to 660 volts and breaking capacities of 15 to 30 MVA at 400 volts. This type of switchgear is built to accommodate three sizes of circuit breakers with maximum current ratings of 800, 2,000 and 3,000 amp respectively. For ratings exceeding 800 amp each cubicle contains only one circuit breaker. Below this rating the front section of each cubicle is divided into two main compartments each of which may contain a breaker.

Alternatively either or both of the compartments may be used to house fused switches, contactors, isolators etc., for the control of circuits which do not demand the use of circuit breakers, while a small central chamber between the two main compartments may be used to house any local controls which may be necessary.

The top and bottom sets of busbars pass straight through all cubicles and can be coupled together at any desired points. The circuit breakers of single-unit cubicles of the higher ratings can be connected to either the upper or lower busbars and may also be used for the purpose of sectioning the busbars.

The various examples referred to indicate that not only is modern switchgear of pleasing appearance and designed with due consideration of proportion and shape, but that at the same time it permits a degree of flexibility which readily enables extensions or modifications to be made at a later date without prejudice to uniformity of appearance.

The height and depth of all cubicles are the same, irrespective of ratings, so that cubicles may be assembled to form a complete switchboard comprising any combination of breakers, fused switches, isolators etc., and additional cubicles can be included in the board to serve as instrument panels.

The 'Prom' Was Lively!

The Hongkong Concert Orchestra's show at the Ritz Ballroom last night, described on the front of the programme as a "Refreshing Summer Season Promenade Concert" was a lively affair with the items sufficiently varied to show off the range of the orchestra.

The conductor, Victor Ardy, obviously enjoys these concerts and communicates his enthusiasm to the performers who in turn pass it on to the audience, building up a happy, informal atmosphere that is so necessary for the success of a light Promenade Concert.

From the moment the orchestra struck up its signature march, "Tolney," a new precision could be heard. Although marches are the forte of the group there have been times in the past when a certain raggedness has crept in. It was not this time, however, and particularly in the march that followed the opening "Florentine" by Fucik the improvement was apparent.

The overture, "Serenade" limped very slightly in the slower parts, but this is the only fault that comes to mind after a most enjoyable evening.

Spanish Interlude

A feature of the concert was a Spanish interlude. At the close of Kelsley's novelty piece, "The Clock and the Dresden Figures" six of the orchestra flung off their white jackets, donned dashing black hats and enthusiastically transformed themselves into "The Caballeros" — five guitarists and an accordionist.

With the rest of the orchestra to back them they played 7 well known Spanish melodies all of which were very well received by the audience. In fact the response to all the items in the programme was good and it was refreshing to see that in spite of the attention that some of the tables were paying to their food and drink and the disinclination of Hongkong audiences to applaud, however much they like what they're getting, the clapping at the end of each piece was loud and sustained. — Jane Roberts.

PLANES BOMB REBELS

Algiers, June 16. French aeroplanes killed 100 rebels this morning in a bombing and strafing action some 200 miles north-west of Tebessa, where 205 insurgents were slain in a daylong battle with French ground forces yesterday.

French officials announced that nearly 100 planes took part in today's action in the mountains of North Constantine, 30 miles east of the airport town of Djidjelli.

It was the largest aerial action since the start of the rebellion.

DISCOVERED

The band was spotted in the mountains by reconnaissance planes. Their exact whereabouts were discovered after aerial photographs were developed. This morning, fighters and bombers headed into the area that could not be reached by ground forces. The exact duration of the bombing attack was not known. Fourteen other rebels were killed in actions in other parts of the country. Five were slain in an operation near Tlemcen in the far west and nine others in the Constantine Department. In the city of Constantine itself, 17 persons were wounded this evening when a grenade was thrown into a cafe. — United Press.

FORMER PRISONERS MEET

Frankfurt, June 16. Former war prisoners' wives and children walked about the exhibition grounds here today with placards reading "Has anyone seen my father, last seen in Stalingrad?" and "Has anyone news of my husband, last heard of at Camp Vorkuta?"

More than 150,000 ex-prisoners gathered for the closing day of the exhibition and in a 1,000-foot long hall 50,000 pictures and names of "missing" persons were also displayed.

The Ex-prisoners of War Association was trying to find out what happened to 4,500,000 Germans still "missing." About 1,350,000 of them soldiers, the others civilian war "casualties." The search service found about 1,400 missing people or clues up their whereabouts during the meeting, but only one relative has gained information by walking about with a placard or picture.

Former inmates of prison camps in Russia mingled with those who had been interned in Britain, the United States, Canada and elsewhere, hoping to meet old friends and helping to give news to others. — China Mail Special.

HEROIN ADDICT'S APPEAL REJECTED

8 Months' Sentence Stands

Six appeals against severity of sentence and one appeal against conviction were dismissed by Mr Justice A. D. Scholes in the Appeals Court this morning.

His Lordship told Kwok Cheung, 41, hawker, who was sentenced to eight months for attempting to buy heroin, that his offence was very serious.

The Judge said that appellant had pleaded guilty to a charge of attempting to buy heroin and the Magistrate had given him a chance and bound him over to be a good behaviour.

Two months later appellant was convicted for possession of heroin and brought back on the original charge and sentenced to eight months.

His Lordship said he saw no reason to interfere with the sentence but ordered that it should start on the date of conviction on May 23.

Lenient Treatment

In another appeal against sentence, his Lordship told Lau Sang, 40, unemployed, with seven previous convictions, that he was very fortunate that the Magistrate dealt so leniently with him. Lau had pleaded guilty before the Magistrate to a charge of attempted theft of six door hinges and sentenced to six months.

Leo Lam, 31, unemployed, who appealed against conviction denied the charge of stealing two pairs of trousers. He said that when he was arrested and a search made, the Police had found nothing on him.

Dismissing the appeal, the Judge said that in this case, the appellant had pleaded guilty to the charge. The evidence was that the appellant was caught red-handed.

Flood-Skipping In Queen's Road

At the height of this morning's downpour a China Mail photographer took this graphic picture in Queen's Road.

Hongkong Soaked

about 10 a.m. and cars sent cascades of water on to the pavement as they swept past. A section of Queen's Road East from the English Methodist Church to Wanchai Market, was turned into a swirling yellow river, led by water and mud coming down from Mount Par-rish and Kennedy Road. There was a similar scene at the junction of Queen's Road East and Stubbs Road. Several streets in Happy Valley and Wanchai were flooded and the water was nearly a foot high outside the Union Jack Club.

In Kowloon, the western half of Nathan Road was flooded from the Peninsula Hotel to the Alhambra Theatre in Yau-mai. Near the Peninsula Hotel, water nearly reached the door-steps of the shops. While in Yau-mai district, water was about a foot high near the Majestic Theatre. Columns of water were pouring into Donna Road from Whitefield Barracks. Causeway Bay area, in the region of Victoria Park, was flooded. Pedestrians using the road were walking in knee-deep water.

Ngachuan area was flooded and No. 5 bus had to suspend service. For 30 minutes, No. 5 service terminated at the Kowloon City terminal instead of continuing to the RAF main gate. The whole service was resumed at 10.30 a.m. Owing to flooding of Prince Edward Road, traffic entering Kowloon from Leichikok was diverted into Peiho Street and Cheungshawan Road. But flooding in Cheungshawan Road was almost knee-deep, resulting in many motor cars stalling and blocking traffic.

All the ground floor shops along that road were badly flooded.

Recordings

There was a trace of rain at 1 a.m. today, but since then the Royal Observatory recorded no rainfall till 7 a.m.

During the three hours ending 9 a.m. quarter of an inch of rain fell. The heaviest down-pour was between 9 and 10 a.m., when 2.71 inches fell, and the next hour, between 10 and 11 a.m. the Royal Observatory recorded 2.24 inches.

The schedule of arrivals and departures of commercial flights from Kai Tak was disrupted. Pan American Airways flight from Tokyo due to arrive at 8.15 a.m. was diverted to Manila after clearing over the airport for two hours. Air India International from Bangkok and BOAC from Rangoon, scheduled to arrive at 10.17 a.m. and 11.09 a.m. respectively, were still hovering over Kai Tak at 12.30 p.m.

A hut, situated near Yau Yai Cheung off Boundary Street, collapsed during the heavy rain sometime after 9 a.m. today, burying two of the occupants there.

The fire brigade was called and the couple were rescued and sent to Kowloon Hospital, suffering from minor injuries.

He Forged Travellers' Cheques

An unemployed man, Lau Shek-shan, 39, appeared before Mr D. Cons at Kowloon this morning on a charge of uttering a forged document and two additional counts of possession and obtaining money on a forged document.

He was sentenced to 18 months. On June 13, it was alleged Lau went to the Broadway money changer where he cashed five American travellers' cheques for $307.85.

The next day he returned to the shop and this time tried to cash five more cheques. The manager, however, had by this time been warned by the Police and when Lau appeared, he was detained.

At the Police station, he was searched and was found to have a forged cheque on him.

SIX HURT IN WEEKEND ACCIDENTS

Six people, including four children, received injuries in three traffic accidents in Hongkong and Kowloon over the weekend. They were all sent to hospital but only three of them have been detained for treatment.

An accident in Prince Edward Road near the junction with La Salle Road, Kowloon, resulted in a Chinese woman and three children being injured. They were knocked down by a private car.

In Hongkong, a boy and a man received injuries in two separate accidents involving two private cars. They were both admitted to the Queen Mary Hospital for treatment.

FINED $100

For indecent assault upon a seven-year-old girl, Frank Charles Garcia, 19, gunner, of 27 Light Battery, Royal Artillery, was fined $100 or 14 days by Mr Hin-shing, J.C. at Central Magistracy this morning.

Defendant pleaded guilty to the charge. He was additionally bound over in $280 for one year.

Tenders For Commercial Radio

A Government spokesman this morning refused to comment on weekend reports that "at least five" tenders had been received for a commercial radio station in Hongkong.

"Positively no information will be given until, in due course, the successful tenderer is announced," he said.

Tenders for the exclusive right to operate a commercial radio station in Hongkong closed on Friday night.

The successful tenderer will have to maintain two transmissions for a period of at least 18 hours a day on each transmission. One will be in Chinese and the other English.

The China Mail learned this morning that among those interested in a commercial broadcasting station were two Chinese newspaper groups and Far East radio interests.

An unofficial member of Legislative Council was also said to be interested in the project but he is said to be participating jointly with other interests.

Junk Owner Fined $50

A motor-junk owner, Chow Sang, 59, was this morning fined $50 by Mr D. L. P. Edwards at the Marine Court for operating his junk, No. M1183F, in the harbour without a certified coxswain.

Defendant pleaded guilty. The Court was told that on June 16, at about 10 p.m., a police launch intercepted the defendant's vessel off Lympus Pass for a routine search. On checking they found the junk to be without a certified coxswain.

New US Consulate

Officers of the United States Consulate-General completed their move into the new building during the week-end. The building, a four-storey structure with a basement, is air-conditioned and built on the design by an American architect to replace the temporary structure in Garden Road.

The Audience Was Spell-bound: This Was A Great Performance

Saturday night's violin recital by Ruggiero Ricci at the University Hall was an event to which we had been looking forward; and so, it appeared, and many others, for the hall was full and the audience one of the most enthusiastic which the Music Society's concerts have drawn.

The last time the present writer heard Mr Ricci was 25 years ago, when he was a boy of 12, in the old Queen's Hall in London; he has fulfilled his early promise and become a violinist of deservedly international fame.
